Fort St. James and Mackenzie have been working closer together now than ever before.

When the economic downturn hit Fort St. James and Mackenzie, both communities worked together to find solutions and have formed closer ties.

"The two communities have shown what tenacity and resilience can do," Mackenzie Mayor Stephanie Killam said. "Thank you to Mayor Harwood and former Mayor that they played. We will continue to work with our sister community as we both move forward."

The connector road is a physical symbol of the new partnership Fort St. James and Mackenzie share.

"It is a pleasure for us to work with our sister community to accomplish a goal that both of us have been striving towards for many years," Mayor Sandra Harwood.

Construction on the connector road is scheduled to begin this spring.

The connector road is aimed to increase economic and tourism opportunities.

Mayor Stephanie Killam, left of Mackenzie and Mayor Sandra Harwood of Fort St. James have been working together to help their communities through tough economic times. They are eagerly awaiting the completion of the connector road which will further cement the relationship between both communities.
